Permissible or Non-Permissible?

☐ An agency preparing a family to foster or adopt a different RCNO child by asking parents to describe their questions or concerns.

☐ Telling prospective foster and adoptive parents that the children in care do not meet their desired characteristics.

☐ Ask prospective parents whether they will consider providing care for the children whose characteristics reflect the children needing homes.

☐ Discussing with parents the challenges that may arise when parenting a child whose characteristics are different from the characteristics the parents originally sought.

☐ A longer more invasive home study process for families who desire to parent across RCNO lines.

☐ Prospective parents may make requests about the characteristics they want in a child, including RCNO.

☐ Agencies must be as flexible with RCNO as they are with other characteristics of a child when presenting a prospective placement to a family.

☐ Requiring parents to develop a trans-RCNO parenting plan.

☐ Requiring that a family learn about a specific RCNO ahead of parenting a child from that RCNO.

☐ Discouraging parents from participating in trans-RCNO parenting.

☐ Offering training about a specific RCNO to all families.

☐ Offering trans-RCNO parenting information to families who request it.

☐ Preparing a family for parenting trans-RCNO by offering post placement services and support for persons who would like such support.

☐ An agency connecting parents with helpful resources to prepare a family for parenting trans-RCNO.
